his own double-barreled shot gun in the face, brained with what is sup-posed to be his own axe, his throat cut,

So far the only one connected with this horrible crime is his nephew, the only person who lived with the old man. His history, so far as given by him, is as follows: Finding the body, he carried it and placed it on the bed in the kitchen on which his uncle usually slept, removed the gun from the bed, carried water to the hogs and some other feeding and then rode to a neighbor's whom he got to stay at the house, and then spent half the night notifying his father and others. Five days after he was arrested he gave up his uncle's pocket book, con-taining $68.90, though at the inquest he stoutly denied having or knowing of any of his uncle's money. Two days after his arrest and whilst in jail, part of the notes and bonds of his uncle, some $500 worth, were found in the lot at the stable scattered over the grass, evidently just put there. These are the main features, from which it will have to keep their weather eyes open, as the officers are around spying out the land and no one knows what they may take a fancy to do. The large apple crop last fall has increased the number of distilleries, and there are

[Correspondence Alexandria Gazette.] LURAY, Va., Nov. 19 .-- A recent murder here last week calls to mind the fact that within the last half score of years there have been in Page half a dozen of the most mysterious, brutal and unavenged murders. The deeds were so perfect in their plots, so hidden in motives and so completely envel-oped in mystery that they remain now just as when consummated. The last was the worst of all. Willis D. Kib ler, an old bachelor 72 years of age, lived at the base of the Massanutton mountain, four miles west of Luray. He was a quiet, good citizen, secretive in his habits of business, and uncommunicative to all save those whom he liked. From this and his fondness of money and the fact that he spent but little, he was thought to have saved a good deal of ready cash. He was shot from within the kitchen of his house with be seen that all is not known. There has been a general feeling among our people at the perpetration of this foul deed, and not less than 500 people were at the preliminary examination. Mar shall McCormick and E. T. Broyles are defending the nephew, Newton Kibler. Not for some years has there been such activity on the part of the brandy such activity on the part of the brandy officials in Page as is now being exercised. Several seizures have been made and in the case of Reuben Triplett, at Rileyville, his still house and fixtures, built for distilling whisky by steam, has been dismantled and his brandy seized and his operations entirely closed. Other seizures have been made and the prospect is that the brandy men will
